Discussion Questions

1. Lisa defines leadership as “tamim”: wholeheartedness and integrity: “Blessed are those whose walk is [wholehearted, and with integrity], who walk according to the law of the Lord.” (Psalm 119:1). How does this definition of leadership compare or contrast with your definition? The world’s definition?
2. Lisa shares that “tamim” leadership begins with stewardship: stewarding who we are before God. How would you describe who you are? How would your closest family and friends describe you? How do you think God would describe you? Which aspects of yourself do you believe are important areas you have been entrusted with to steward?
3. Lisa shares the second facet of “tamim” leadership is obedience: knowing our limits and what we are (and aren’t) called, qualified, and equipped to do. Share some examples of things that you feel called (and not called) to do in this season of your work and life.
4. Lisa shares the third facet of “tamim” leadership is excellence (vs. success): pursuing love and focusing our attention (and intention) on the people God has entrusted to us. Who do you believe God has entrusted to you in your current work and life, and how do you sense God is calling you to be with and serve these people?

5. Overall, what do you think are some obstacles that keep us stuck in the worldly paradigm of survival and success? What are some deterrents that have caught you up personally? Between Mark Ko, Nicholas Pearce, and Lisa Slayton's talks, what takeaways do you find most helpful for renewing your mind and directing your behavior away from the worldly definition and towards God's definition of success?
